Do you really think that change has no meaning? The abode 'on' earth is the abode of man and creation. 'in' the earth is more the realm of demons and even deeper in the earth, hell it's self. Let's look at some more of those 'On' to 'In' changes, although this

Click to expand...

Oh I definitely believe that In vs On can change a meaning but it depends on context. Multiple sentences can be the same exact proposition, but sometimes tiny change can result in a different proposition. "The bug is on the rubber ball" is a different proposition than "The bug is in the rubber ball." But in the verse I referenced we have a comparison between God's will being done equally in two different places. In such a comparison In vs On is inconsequential (even if elsewhere "In the Earth" DOES have special meaning). Nobody in church is listening to that and thinking that it's saying God's will be done in Hell as it is in Heaven.

The Parson said: ↑

Here's a major meaning alteration for you:

See if you think that doctrine has been totally destroyed.

Acts 19:2 He said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost. (KJV) It's my contention, with also some residue, that "since you believed" was added to this verse.

Idk, there's an awful lot of translation disputes out there, and some textual criticism issues too. This just seems like one of those cases to me, however I can't make any kind of definitive stance because I am not familiar with those detailed textual arguments, I am happy if the jist of what is being said doesn't look contradictory to me.

HopelInJesusOnly said: ↑

The ME isn't only restricted to bible changes, as a reminder.

Yes I know. Do you have any ME examples (Biblical or not) where you think that the proposition clearly changed, instead of just a tiny sentence change? For example, even though there is technically a difference between the propositions "Momma said life is like a box of chocolates" and "Momma said life was like a box of chocolates" the context isn't meant to be taken that literally so it's the same proposition. Nobody thought that Forest was saying that his mom used to believe that life was like a box of chocolates but then changed her mind and thought that it wasn't like a box of chocolates anymore.

Hey, let me post a verse I just discovered this morning. How about you tell me what it's saying without relying on anyone else's opinion or commentary... You go ahead and tell me that this is a modern edit please.

Habakkuk 3:3 God came from Teman, and the Holy One from mount Paran. Selah. His glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praise. (KJV) distinction between On and In, but the context in this verse actually supports On and In being synonymous with each other not different (both equally distinct from Under). We need to look at concept vs concept not translated English word vs translated English word. There are many translations because putting Hebrew or Greek into English has no 100% airtight translation. So in some contexts an English On vs an English In is of no significance to the concepts.

These are different contexts, one is a two tier comparison between God's will on Earth and Heaven, whereas the other is a three tier description of Heaven, Earth, and another 3rd realm. I would agree with you that something was fishy if it said "Thy will be done Under Earth as it is in Heaven" (I would agree that the proposition changed)

Oh, alrighty then. Let's deal with a bit of evidence from my Baptist brethren from 1921.

This is the Northern Baptist Convention newsletter with an exert from one of the articles. Take a look at what it says: (please expand it, and read it)

Article 13 says: "There is a personal devil, a being of great cunning and power, the prince of the power of the air. . . . He shall ultimately be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, and shall be tormented day and night forever." The Moody Bible Institute accepting the statement of

Click to expand...

They used the King James, that's evident from reading this newsletter. Yet the exact quote can't be found in any English language bible anywhere. As of today, the verse reads "the truth shall MAKE you free, not SET you free. You don't find that in the least bit Odd???

John 8:32 And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. 8:33 They answered him, We be Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man: how sayest thou, Ye shall be made free?

This verse in 'it's original form' was the basis for the song, "He Set Me Free" by the song writer, Albert E. Brumley in 1939.

Yeah I know, I don't believe ME but I was just asking a follow up question to the belief in ME (if propositions ever change or just wording) and it landed us into a hermeneutic disagreement. Didn't mean to get steered into that, that's why I asked for even a non-Biblical example if there was one.

The Parson said: ↑

Hey, now here's a thought. Do you think maybe this could be one of the things blinding people to the actual conundrum?

We will hit a brick wall pretty fast since you are KJ only, I don't believe that there is a conundrum. The whole point of Bible studies, and consulting Hebrew & Greek explanations, and comparative religion & cultural studies, etc, is to go deeper than just reading an English Bible translation. Decisions have to be made for any English translation because there is no perfect way to do it (hence the benefit of Bible studies), if you want a deeper understanding you're supposed to get behind the text anyway, even a lot of laypersons do Bible studies to go deeper than an unaided reading of an English translation. And going back to what I said earlier, even if we do have extreme laypersons who do nothing but read the Bible, none of them are walking away from their reading saying to themselves "I can't believe it says Thy will be done in Hell as it is in Heaven", or thinking that it was talking about demons. So there simply is no deception taking place for both the straight reader of the text, or the person who goes deeper.

The Parson said: ↑

Interpretation disputes have always been the case since day one, way before there was a King James Bible.

The Parson said: ↑

Prophetic interpretations are more speculative than other genres, I'm not seeing it. ME also claims that absolutely everything changes, so to be consistent you would also need to call all of reality supernatural too.

Those verses have always been there. You are just taking them out of context and misunderstanding them. And to be honest it's kind of offensive people would say God's word is not by him and what he writes makes no sense, that's what atheists do. Just because you don't understand it doesn't mean it is changed. The bible is the only thing you can trust that has not been changed. In any times of confusion, you go to the word.

Interesting, I didn't know that. But either way, fear comes from the demonic realm too. Our real wrestle is against wickedness in higher places and it just gets more and more intense as satan knows his time is short. Does this mean the Mandela effect is real? When it comes to bible changes I say absolutely not. That is preserved by God and satan can't touch it. It is unchanged and the only trustworthy and reliable source we go to in times of confusion. But other little changes such as pop culture changes (satan's playground)? Perhaps...

If I didn't realize how shocking this is to even suggest it to a blindsided audience, I'd be offended by your statement myself. But I'm not. And I'm far from being an atheist. I am a born again child of God. I know my scripture, and have the education, and decades of experience to back it up. Both as an evangelist and a pastor...

Look, all I can do is present what evidence I've found, which by the way, I've only presented a fraction of what I've found. It's your place to either except it or reject it. That's your own choice. Most likely you haven't even looked at, or considered what I'm proposing because of a blind mindset.

You're only seeing one side of me. If you would of asked me any other question concerning the scriptures, I would have gladly answered it. Or you think me incapable of understanding sound doctrine because I'm letting you folks know my concerns, and findings?
